Contextual learning is based on a constructivist theory of teaching and learning. Learning takes place when teachers are able to present information in such a way that students are able to construct meaning based on their own experiences. Contextual learning experiences include internships, service learning and study abroad programs.

Learning context is defined as the situation in which something is learned or understood, a situation that can impact how something is learned or what is taught. When you take advice from a friend but would not take the exact same advice if given by your mother, this is an example of a situation in which the learning context matters greatly. An example of learning context is the external learning environment including the quality of

The Social-Cultural Context of Child Development and Learning

Joyce (2012) suggests that identifying a historical context in outdoor learning is central to understanding modern day practices. It wasn't until the late eighteenth century that children began to be seen as individuals in their own right; previously they were regarded by society as miniature adults.
